For the Love of Pat!

By JAMES H. DUDLEY

"AND she had the gun, sure enough," Patrolman Hanney continued, "trapped in a holster above her knee. What a hand! The air was full of heels and finger-nails like wrestling with a centipede. And when this punk turned in, I had to take time out to cuff him once."

"What's your name?" he asked the girl. Her lips closed firmly. "The dame that tipped me off," volunteered Hanney, "called her Pat."

"Maybe her pal will oblige us after we work on him a bit," the sergeant pushed a button and a buzzer police man came in. "Take her away," he ordered.

"Let her go and I'll talk," said the boy who came in with her.

"No, Frankie!" Hanney limped to the matron's aid. The girl's resistances were slighted over 1,100. After all registrants have been examined, examinations by the board of examiners of those in the classification will proceed according to receipt of quota calls.

The Appomattox quota for the year ending in June, 1941, was 1,100. The quota was virtually completed by May inductions.

She was voted the most popular girl in Appomattox and was the president of her class when she graduated from high school. She possessed unusual business acumen and her varied were often sought. Many and varied were her interests. In early life she was the assistant postmistress of Appomattox. Later she was the owner and proprietor of Virginia's Bonnet Shop. At the time of her passing she was conducting a business department at Richmond, to which place she had moved with her husband some years ago.

"It means exercising far-seeing eyes in conserving the fertility of the soil and at the same time improving quality and increasing volume," states Mr. Davis.
